INTRODUCTION

This study aims to explore the living conditions of tea garden labourers at Tengapani Tea Estate, Tinsukia District. The research, conducted by Nehal Chhalani, examines various aspects of their lives, including work conditions, income, and access to basic amenities. The study highlights the challenges faced by these workers and suggests potential improvements to enhance their quality of life.

Methodology

The research methodology involves a comprehensive field study, including interviews and surveys with tea garden labourers. Data analysis was performed using statistical tools to understand the prevailing trends and issues.

Results

The results indicate significant disparities in living conditions among tea garden labourers. Many workers face low wages, inadequate housing, and limited access to healthcare. The study recommends implementing strategies to improve working conditions, such as increasing wages, providing better housing, and ensuring access to healthcare services.

Conclusion

The research underscores the importance of addressing the needs of tea garden labourers. Implementation of the proposed recommendations could lead to improved living conditions and a better quality of life for these workers.
